

Corporation for Travel Promotion Appoints JWT as Global Marketing Agency of Record

Washington, D.C. - August 22, 2011

The Corporation for Travel Promotion announced today that they have named JWT agency of record to lead America's first ever global marketing campaign to attract international travelers. JWT won the business partnering with WPP sister agencies including Mediacom, The Brand Union and Hill & Knowlton in a pitch against two undisclosed global agencies.

The U.S. Congress established the CTP in 2010 as a partnership between the travel industry and the federal government, in order to create a marketing and promotion program to compete for international visitors and the job creation and economic growth they bring.

CEO for the Corporation for Travel Promotion, Jim Evans said, "America is a uniquely compelling and diverse travel destination, and the CTP, for the first time in our nation's history, will be creating "Brand USA," to help bring more international visitors to every corner of our wonderful country.

"JWT's global network is unparalleled, especially within our priority markets. They demonstrated impressive strategic insight and a genuine, shared passion for our mission. I'm excited to welcome them as a strategic marketing partner to what will be a world-class team."

The CTP announced the search for a marketing partner in July 2011 to assist in the allocation of their inaugural $200 million budget. The pitch was run by Gary Stolkin, CEO of The Talent Business.

In the coming days, CTP expects to announce their executive team, consisting of Chief Marketing Officer, Chief Business Development Officer, Vice President of Operations and Vice President of Stakeholder Engagement.

"We are honored to be a part of such an important mission, the benefits of which will be felt in communities around America" said Bob Jeffrey, JWT Worldwide CEO and chairman." The dedication and energy of Jim and the CTP Board was evident right from our very first meeting. From the beginning, there was great chemistry and a shared enthusiasm, and JWT—a company with a near 150-year history rooted in both American and global culture—was the obvious best choice," Jeffrey concluded.

Stephen J. Cloobek, chairman of the CTP board of directors applauded JWT's selection saying, "I congratulate our search committee for making a decisive and thoughtful choice. The selection of a global marketing agency is a critical step to getting the CTP's marketing program up and running."

JWT's duties are expected to commence immediately. The CTP will be working with great speed to develop the marketing and brand strategy, which will be unveiled in November at World Travel Market in London and implemented in 2012. This campaign will showcase America to the world, and drive economic growth and job creation in communities across the nation.
